Staff recommends city council deny appeals on stadium

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

Three different parties have appealed one of the actions taken by the West Sacramento Planning Commission in preparation for the "Raley's Field" minor league stadium planned for the city's riverfront. The city council will listen to the appeals tonight as part of its regular meeting.

Two local residents and an attorney who lists several Sacramento residents as his clients have appealed the planning commission decisions, which involved approval of a planned development permit for the ballpark. West Sacramento city staff has completed a report supporting the planning commission's decision and recommending that the council affirm the commission's decisions.

The appellants are:

■ Mary Lasell of West Sacramento, who stated that the "stadium needs to be covered and very insulated" in order that it not produce excess noise for neighbors. She also objected to the city's plans to deal with the city's plans to deal with the impacts from lights, traffic and parking from the stadium, and said the project would "attract the homeless, indigents and panhandlers."

■ Marna Miller of West Sacramento, who said that the stadium's estimated attendance figures weren't realistic and that the stadium could leave the city facing financial impacts "from the lack of planning and wrong calculations."

The city will be guaranteeing part of the bonds being issued for the project. The bonds are supposed to be paid back through stadium revenues.

Miller also said that the project's environmental analysis has been insufficient, and that a specific environmental impact report needed to be written.

■ Attorney John Latini of Sacramento, who has said he is representing Sacramento County residents Carole Blalosk, Jillian Smith and Renee Schuemperli, in this appeal.

Latini's appeal states that the project's environmental analysis has not adequately responded to concerns raised by the City of Sacramento and CalTrans, and specifically cites possible impacts to relating to parking, noise, and vehicle and pedestrian traffic.

Latini also expressed concerns about soil and water contamination at the longtime industrial site where the ballpark is to built, and about what effect the construction might have on spreading this pollution.

He asks that a full environmental impact report be performed.

As part of the lengthy resolution prepared by city staff to respond to the appeals, Latini's credibility has been questioned.

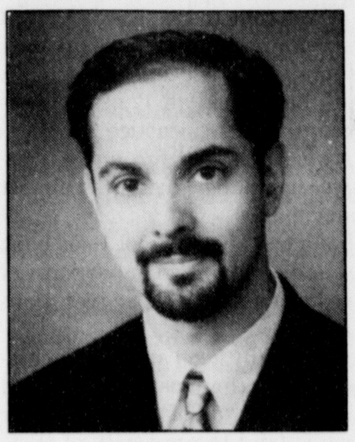

The resolution states that he "appears to have been less than forthcoming with the City," and that when he was asked by the planning commission whom he was representing, Latini first was "reluctant to reveal the identity of his clients," and then indicated his client was Charles Jensen. "However, when Mr. Latini subsequently provided a membership list of his clients, the list did not include Charles Jensen," the resolution states, adding that the council is entitled to consider the credibility of witnesses and their motives.

A politics of relationships

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

"Different times require different strategies," said Mayor Christopher Cabaldon on Friday, explaining why he is focusing notably on improving West Sacramento's relationships with its neighbors. This strategy is one key part in the city's (thus far) success in furthering a riverfront baseball stadium, and has improved the city's visibility in the region.

"We happen to be involved in a lot of initiatives that really require a lot of regional cooperation, but that hasn't always been the case," he added. "A lot of improvement projects don't require that – like the civic center project or the bridge project. But a lot of the projects we're doing now demand, if not the help, then at least not the meddling of other jurisdictions."

CHRISTOPHER CABALDON

The 12-year old city hasn't seen before the kind of regional networking and cooperation now coming into play for the ballpark proposal, where Sacramento County has "stepped to the plate" to help build a stadium which isn't even in its own jurisdiction.

Cabaldon, the city's 33-year old mayor who is also vice chancellor of the state's community college system, feels this is just one of the signs of the value of staying on good terms with neighboring leaders. (He is also

New principal takes reigns

By Daryl Fisher

Ken Whittemore was born and raised in Anderson, California, which is a few miles south of Redding.

"My dad was in the timber industry," recalled Ken, "and when the mills were going well, which was pretty much all the time back then, life was good. But like all parents, my father and mother wanted me to have a really good future and they were determined that I go to college and get the very best education I could."

After graduating from Shasta Junior College, Ken decided to enroll in Sacramento State University, and his choice of colleges had more to do with his brother than it did with him.

"My brother had a series of open heart operations," explained Ken, "and had both of his heart valves replaced with artificial ones. His doctors were in Sacramento and I figured if I went to college at Sac State, my parents could stay with me and feel more comfortable when my brother was in Sutter hospital, which was a lot of the time. The doctors told us he would only live to be about 30, and unfortunately, they were right, but he had such a great outlook on life, and I learned things from him that I'm still grateful for to this day."

After graduating from Sac State and getting his teaching credential, Ken taught social science and coached the football and wrestling teams at the high school in Grants Pass, Oregon. Four years later, he moved back to California and took a similar position in Arcata, and after another four years, he went to Quincy, where he became an assistant principal.

"When the vice principal position at River City High School opened up," said Ken, "I decided to take it and the past five years have been the most rewarding of my career. It's hard to explain just how much I've come to like the kids and staff at River City, and I'm really going to miss them, but I'm a company man, and right now I'm needed at Golden State Middle School, and I'm really looking forward to all the challenges and opportunities the next few months will no doubt bring."

KEN WHITTEMORE with daughter JOCELYN

When asked his opinion about the parent-teacher-principal-board of education controversy which had been swirling around Golden State Middle School for months, leading to the February 23rd resignation of his predecessor, Ken said, "I make it a point never to dwell on the past. I'm also not the least bit interested in politics. The kids are what's important, and I'm going to take things one day at a time and keep myself focused on what needs to get done around here. If students need books and desks, they're going to get them, and if there's anything I can do to create a better, more successful environment for teachers, I'm going to try and do that, too. We have a very good staff here, and great kids, and our future can be as bright as we want it to be."

One of the nice surprises awaiting Ken at Golden State was the discovery that many of his new students are the little brothers and sisters of students he has gotten to know well at River City High School.

"I know I'm always talking about all the great kids we have in this school district," said Ken, "but it's true. And our schools are still small enough that teachers and administrators can really get to know their students, and the more kids I've gotten to know in West Sacramento, the more I've been impressed by them."

"Ken is firm but fair," said Dr. Donna Smith, the principal at River City High School, "and kids respond to that. I have no doubt that he will do a great job at Golden State and we here at River City are happy for him, because he's ready to be a principal and Golden State is a great opportunity for him, but that doesn't mean we aren't going to miss him. He's always been my right hand man and it's going to be a big adjustment not having him on campus anymore. But our loss is definitely Golden State's gain, and we all wish him nothing but the very best."

"At a middle school," explained Ken, "what you're really doing

Port of 'West' Sacramento?

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

Among the regional issues soon to be in the forefront of West Sacramento's concerns may be a proposal to take more local control of the Port of Sacramento.

Mayor Christopher Cabaldon on Friday echoed statements by other West Sacramento officials in suggesting that the time has passed for the port (located north of Harbor Blvd. in West Sacramento) to be controlled by a largely-apathetic coalition of governments dominated by the city and county of Sacramento.

"We would need cooperation from Sacramento," said Cabaldon. "For Sacramento County, the port (which not consistently profitable) is not a tremendous boon or a tremendous liability. But to us, the potential for what that asset could be is so significant that we have to look at alternatives."

The port's district – which could be tapped to guarantee bonds for the port – consists of all of Sacramento County and the eastern part of Yolo County. Because these jurisdictions effectively shot down the idea of issuing bonds to raise capital for improvements at the port several years ago, they sentenced it to a struggling status quo.

"We're trying to figure out what the options are," Cabaldon said. "Part of that is trying to figure out what's the best policy for that big swath of land and water (comprising the port) in the middle of the city."

Cabaldon said that any future look at the port would also have to consider the jobs and businesses that depend on its shipping capacity to survive.

But with the concurrence of the city and county of Sacramento and the county of Yolo, he said, the port district could be shrunk to relieve Sacramento of both the burden and responsibility of operating the Port of Sacramento, and to transfer that burden to West Sacramento.

"We all want the port to be successful," said the mayor, "but if that's not economically feasible, we have to look at alternatives."

Cabaldon added that officials from across the river are "ready to talk to us about that."

There's nothing like Little League pee-wee baseball

Note: Opening Day for the West Sacramento Little League is only a month away, teams are already practicing, and I'm reminded of the following column, which first appeared in the News-Ledger in 1993.

My Back Pages

By Daryl Fisher

The coming of spring in the Sacramento Valley means different things to different people. To the sun worshiper, it means that endless months of depression and white skin are almost over; to my wife, it means it's time to scrub down the house from top to bottom; to the lover of gardening, it's time to start preparing the soil for all the glorious new growth which is just around the corner; to the local baseball fan, it means it's almost time to begin making excuses for the San Francisco Giants poor start; and to me, it usually means I start doing even more stupid things than usual.

I guess the best example of that is the fact my four children were born on November 26th, January 22nd, February 4th, and February 14th, respectively.

This year, however, I have really topped myself. My youngest son, Kyle, talked me into signing up to manage his pee-wee baseball team (the Reds) in the West Sacramento Little League. His argument was simple and effective. Since I had managed his older brother's pee-wee teams, I owed him.

"If you're the manager, Dad," he said with deep conviction, "I'll get to be the pitcher."

"But it doesn't exactly work that way, Kyle," I tried to explain. "Plus in pee-wees, there is no pitcher. Everyone hits off a tee."

"Right," he said, obviously starting to question just what kind of manager I was going to be if I didn't even know that you need a pitcher to play baseball.

"Kyle," I said, "to tell you the truth, I'm a little burned out on baseball coaching. Maybe you could wait another year? You're only six, you know."

"But, Dad," he said with his most pathetic voice, "that's what you said last year." Then he looked up at me with those big brown eyes of his and his facial expression left no doubt that he was thinking those awful words which all parents fear: you love my brothers (or sisters) more than me!

So, once again, it was time to break out the fluff balls and undersized mitts and prepare my ears for that awful aluminum "clink" of the bat.

But by the time I had called all 12 of the Reds and told them about their first practice, I was beginning to feel some of the old fun and excitement which pee-wee baseball brings out in almost everyone who participates.

With all the phone calls completed, I sat back for a few minutes and tried to remember some of the things required of a successful pee-wee manager.

First, you have to be really good at tying double-knots. Pee-wees are, for the most part, six and seven years old, and almost all of them will show up for every practice (and the majority of their games) with at least one shoe untied.

Second, you have to be great at finding things. Pee-wees lose their hats, their bats, their gloves, their snack-bar money and even their parents form time to time.

Third, you have to be accomplished at being able to talk some sweet, unsuspecting soul into being the team mother. She is the person who has to, among many other things, organize the team float for the Opening Day parade, get other busy mothers to work in the snack bar, and collect all the money from the candy sale. This person always ends up being a saint in my eyes.

Fourth, you have to be able to quickly establish a set of often repeated rules, the most important being that only one pee-wee at a time (the hitter) can have a bat in his or her hands. There is nothing quite as frightening as watching five or six eager young pee-wees with baseball bats warming up for batting practice at the same time.

Fifth, you have to be able to cheerfully accept the fact that the attention span for a perfectly normal pee-wee is approximately 30 seconds (and on warm, sunny afternoons with interesting looking puffy white clouds floating above them, even that number drops dramatically).

Sixth, you have to have energetic adult base coaches with loud and distinctive voices. Pee-wees love to get on base and race around the diamond, but they're not always sure just when to take off or what direction to go. A good base coach can get them pretty skilled at running to first base instead of third when they hit the ball, but only a great one can organize things from that point on.

And finally, and maybe most important, you have to be able to make all your parents and grandparents truly believe that pee-wee baseball isn't about winning and losing, but rather it's about riding around in a home-made float on Opening Day, pizza parties with teammates, after-the-game snow cones, good sportsmanship and learning to love the game.

"Dad," said my six-year-old son as he wound himself up in front of me and released his best imaginary fastball, "you know what?"

"What?"

"The Reds are going to kick butt!"

Sports Insider

By Rich Novoa

March madness has arrived, as 64 men's college basketball teams prepare their moves for the "Big Dance' and the right to be called the 1999 NCAA basketball champions. The tournament kicks off with first and second round games on Thursday, March 11 and Saturday, March 13. The "sweet sixteen" teams will then move on to regional play on Thursday, March 18 and Saturday, March 20, sending the final four teams to the semifinals on March 27 in St. Petersburg, Florida. The final game is set for Monday, March 29 (6:00 p.m.), right there in Tampa Bay.

In the East, the tournament favorite has to be the Duke Blue Devils (32-1), who marched through the ACC regular season and postseason at 19-0. Last years NCAA champs, the Kentucky Wildcats (25-8), won their Southeastern Conference tournament, are seeded third in the Midwest bracket, while in the West, Connecticut (28-2) and Stanford (25-6), will be the teams to beat. The South will be up for grabs with Auburn (27-3) and Maryland (26-5) leading the way.

Here's my picks for the "sweet sixteen" teams.

In the South, it will be Auburn, UCLA, St. Johns, and Maryland. The East will be represented by Duke, Wisconsin, Cincinnati, and Miami, Fla. The Midwest should have Michigan St., Arizona, Kentucky and Utah. The West teams will be Connecticut, Iowa, Florida and Stanford. Let's see how the upsets play out in this wild and wacky college tournament. Next week the picks get harder!

In pro basketball the Sacramento Kings (9-9) are playing a new and exciting brand of basketball. The Kings lost two very close home games last week to Seattle and Portland but with a little more experience at crunch time (the last two minutes of the game) they could have won both games. On the road last week the Kings blew out Phoenix Saturday night, while handling Dallas at home on Sunday to even their record at .500.

The Kings will enjoy a day off before they travel to Los Angeles on Thursday to play the Clippers (0-15). Let's hope the Kings don't look past the Clippers, who at press time, were still hoping for the their first win of the season, and I do mean hoping! The Clippers will play back to back games this week against the Lakers, so they should be 0-17, and probably tie the NBA record for consecutive losses to open a season. The Kings, who will catch the Clippers at home, playing their third consecutive game, and playing to avoid th NBA loss record! Look out Kings, the Clippers could be laying a full-court trap! (If you're interested, 24 is the NBA record for consecutive losses). It's not all good for the Kings, who will play eight games in 11 days, including five in six days! The Kings will return to the Arco Arena on Friday night against Minnesota, then host the Lakers, led by the Shaq, on Sunday, March 14 (6 p.m., ch. 31).

The US "Nike" Cup Soccer tournament is set to start on March 11 in Los Angeles featuring four World Cup qualifing teams. On Thursday, the US will play Guatemala (ESPN 5:30 p.m.), while Mexico tangles with Bolivia. On Saturday the tournament moves south to San Diego, with the USA playing Mexico (12:30 p.m., ABC), then Bolivia plays Guatemala at 3 p.m. In the MLS, the San Jose Clash are preparing for their season opener at Spartan Stadium, on Saturday, March 20 (8 p.m.) against the 1998 Major League Soccer champion Chicago Fire. Tickets are available by calling the Clash at 408-985-GOAL.

In boxing, Pay-per-View has a "Great Heavyweight Championship" bout on tap this Saturday, March 13. At Madison Square Garden in New York, Evander Holyfield will put up his WBA and IBF titles against Lennox Lewis' WBC belt for the undisputed heavyweight champion of the world. Can you believe it, a title bout where both fighters are putting up their championship belts? This will be a barn burner that will end with a knock out! If Lewis stays away from Holyfield's inside power punches, he may have a chance at winning the fight by decision. Look for Evander to make his statement as one of the greatest heavyweights of all time, by stunning Lewis with a first round KO! West Sac's undefeated boxer Willie Jorrin has his bout at the Radisson Hotel moved back a couple of weeks to Sunday, March 28 at 6 p.m. Tickets are available at Pro-Venture Travel in West Sac (372-9294).

See ya next week!

RC tennis takes two of three

From River City High School

Taking two out of three contests this past week, the River City High School Tennis Team improved its 1999 record to four wins and one loss. All three matches were against fellow defending league champions from 1998, and offered perhaps the toughest one week regular season test a Raider team has ever taken.

First up was a north-south battle of Raiders as the Central Catholic Raiders from Modesto came to West Sacramento and snapped R.C.'s twenty match regular season win streak with a 4-3 win. Central Catholic has won four straight Southern Athletic League titles. The locals had their chances in some of the individual matches they lost, with several going a full three sets. River City's three wins came at #1 girls singles where Khonesavanh Lattasima won 6-0, 7-5 and in girls and mixed doubles. Sue Yang and Sokpin Phoung triumphed in the girls match 10-9 with a 7 points to 4 tiebreak, and Sisavat Phouanglasy and Erin Cheechov won 10-5 in mixed.

Thursday brought a road trip to Sutter Creek and a match against Amador, the defending champions in the Mother Lode League. Playing by the host's five-match format, the Raiders squeezed out a 3-2 win. Lattasima again led the way with a 6-4, 6-2 win in girls singles, while seniors Khampheng Insixiengmay and Loan Nguyen took mixed doubles 8-2 and sophomores Phoung and Cheechov won in girls doubles 8-3.

On Friday, R.C. traveled two hours south to Livingston to battle the 1998 Trans Valley League champions. The Wolves, who handed the Raiders their lone regular season loss a year ago, were even after the first four matches. However, River City's depth took over and the visitors swept the longtime Raider nemesis Jorge Maldonado 6-2, 6-4 at #1 boys singles and Insixiengmay played his best match of the season at #2 in a 6-4, 7-6 (7-4) win. Lattasima (6-4, 6-4) and Nguyen (5-7, 6-3, 6-4) also prevailed, giving the Raiders a sweep of the singles matches.

River City took three of the five doubles contests with Phouanglasy and Casey Insixiengmay winning 6-2, 6-4 at #2 boys, Yang and Phoung routing the Wolves #1 girls pair 6-0, 6-0, and Cheechov and Keonakone Lattasima cruising to a 6-1, 6-0 win at #2 girls.

Raider Coach Dave Brooks was pleased with the results as his team looks forward to tomorrow's Golden Empire League opener at home against Marysville. "Including the match against Natomas the week before, we played four straight defending league champions and we went 3 and 1. We had our chances but couldn't quite convert against Central Catholic, but then bounced back and played well on the road, especially against a very good Livingston team. We're looking forward to starting G.E.L. play against Marysville."

The Raiders also host nonleague Argonaut this Friday and G.E.L. opponent Lindhurst next Tuesday. Matches begin at 3 p.m. at the high school.

News-Ledger Editorial

A worthwhile planning investment?

Fresh from a pro-city election and loaded for bear, the new West Sacramento city government in 1987 braced itself for a development boom that still hasn't come. A lingering recession helped put the ambitious city's growth plans on hold.

So the city did about the only thing it could do while it waited for the builders to get their financial concerns in order. It started planning. Taking advantage of the relative quiet, the city put together plans for its Southport region, its riverfront and its West Capitol Ave. corridor, deciding (with varying degrees of wisdom) how best to use its real estate assets when growth takes root.

In many cases, these planning processes were helped by the fact that there were few urgent development projects on the "front burner," pushing the planning process in purely selfish directions. The recession reduced the pressure on planners to come up with land use schemes that created an immediate, short-term gain for particular landowners and developers.

As a city official pointed out last week, this is a principle worth remembering. It is easiest to make long term land use plans when development pressures are low, and hardest to make them intelligently with some project's lobbyists are breathing down the planners' necks.

The trick, then, is to do the planning late enough that future needs can be accurately predicted and early enough that development pressure isn't already at a climax and isn't in the driver's seat.

This brings us to the question of West Sacramento's future growth and expansion outside of current city limits. It is inevitable that the city will grow beyond its current boundaries, both to the north and the south. In fact, just a few years ago a number of projects were on the books for new developments to be built to the north and south of city limits and then annexed into the city (when economic tides turned, the plans were shelved).

When these plans were being pushed, the city began a process of its "sphere of influence" study. This is a governmental process involving Yolo County and other local governments and is used to determine the areas in the city's sphere of influence, with these areas ultimately destined to become future parts of West Sacramento. But when the development projects to the north and south went away, so did the sphere of influence study. In fact, the city – attempting to be fiscally responsible to the taxpayers – has not been interested in funding a sphere of influence study unless there are private developers involved to pay for it. This effectively means that there must be private development plans on line while the planners are at work.

This is well meaning, but is it the best way to go?

It might be better for West Sacramento to go ahead with the sphere of influence studies before development pressures mount again, even if that means advancing the funds for the study out of city coffers. This would help ensure that plans are made with a maximum of public interest in mind, and a minimum of private interest. A better set of plans might come out of using this "calm before the storm" to do the brainstorming and negotiations involved in determining the city's long term borders.

Letters to the Editor

Mayor: disappointed in Turner letter

What a disappointment to read the letter by John Turner, representing the West Sacramento Land Company, in the News-Ledger last week. Mr. Turner belittled and disparaged Margy Yutzy, a resident of the Linden West subdivision who has been active in neighborhood efforts to improve the proposed River Ranch subdivision across the street from her home. River Ranch is being developed by the West Sacramento Land Company.

When the River Ranch proposal came before the City Council, I voted for it. Ms. Yutzy and her neighbors had pressed for significant changes to the proposed development, and they succeeded in persuading the developer to agree to the most important modifications. Although not everyone was happy with every aspect of the compromise, this project represented an example of neighborhood involvement resulting in a far better development.

Given that the modified development was approved and is now moving forward, I was quite surprised to see Mr. Turner engage in a childish attack on a resident who did nothing more than look out for the quality of life in her neighborhood.

Mr. Turner seems to not understand the City's Southport Framework Plan when he says that "our rural atmosphere is gone forever" and that we can no longer expect picturesque views of the Sacramento skyline or the snowcapped Sierras. We are absolutely committed to preserving the rural heritage and character of Southport as we grow, and anyone interested in pursuing developments in Southport will be put to that test.

I expect every developer to treat the residents of this community with respect. Mr. Turner's letter was inappropriate, discourteous, and offensive, and his apparent vision of our community's future is just plain wrong. The West Sacramento Land Company owes Ms. Yutzy and her neighbors an apology

CHRISTOPHER L. CABALDON
Mayor, City of West Sacramento

Rebutting Turner

As a lifelong farmer and resident of West Sacramento, I'm appalled by John Turner's attempts to discredit my neighbor, Margy Yufzy. Since I've grown those crops – wheat, tomatoes, sugar beets, safflower and hay – I can vouch that those crops have been grown across the street on the soon-to-be-developed River Ranch subdivision. It's a pity that the developer, West Sacramento Land Co., takes her comments so personally.

Let's face it. The developer doesn't make much on the piddly amount of money that the farmer pays him for rent on that property. The big bucks, obviously, are in development. We don't blame the developer for trying to earn a profit. The real problem is our local government. Those individuals are supposed to represent us. Instead, they seem to be the elected representatives of the developers.

We sat in horror on Jan. 7, when the Planning Commission voted 5-0 to accept the plan for the River Ranch development. On the local residents' appeal to the City Council on Feb. 17, the City Council voted 5-0 to accept the developers' plan. Not one City Planner or Council member voted against the plan. Odds of that are astronomical. All we, the people, want them to do is hear us out.

It all boils down to basic distrust of our local government. West Sacramento has a history of poor planning when it comes to development. Look at West Capitol Avenue. A lot of it looks like a run-down part of Mexico. In fact, years ago, an NBA team – I think it was the Cavaliers – refused to stay at the then-Hotel El Rancho. They were horrified at the appearance of the surrounding area, and they moved to a hotel in Sacramento, saying that West Capitol Avenue reminded them "of Tijuana." Look at the Lighthouse Marina Project. They destroyed irreplaceable riparian habitat, and mitigated it by destroying some of the best agricultural land in Yolo County. Look at that weed patch off Old River Road between West Sacramento and Woodland! And for what?

They developed maybe one or two lots.

As residents, we are simply afraid that they are going to screw up again. We have to live with their mistakes. It's sad when increasing the tax base is more important than objective, responsible public-policy decisions. Local government has a moral and ethical obligation to make the right decisions for the people.

Not the developers.

RAY YEUNG
West Sacramento

Turner's tone inappropriate

The very belittling letter written by the gentleman was uncalled for in a civil society today. HE is welcome to his opinion, but the tone was unnecessary.

My husband and I bought our first and only home here in Linden Acres in 1953. We fell in love with the wonderful openness of the area. Our boys were brought up in a rural type atmosphere instead of a big city as we had been. They too worked for the farmers...moving irrigation pipes and picking tomatoes. Yes the family even hunted pheasant on the open lands in what is now Linden West Unit 1. It was a good life. We always knew development was inevitable and accepted that fact grudgingly. We participated in the planning of that development for about 20 years...attending and commenting during hundreds of meetings from Yolo County agencies to local ones as well as citizens' neighborhood groups.

I have studied and commented on many developers proposals (including EIR's) as an interested citizen of Southport. They come into our area bringing their grandiose plans, promising pie-in-the-sky changes which have yet to come to fruition. An example: back in the 1970's Applicant-owner: Westport Investments Co. c/o Howard Turner, 830 Jefferson Blvd was granted approval to subdivide land and construct 208 dwelling units (Linden West) in the area south of Linden Road west of Ironwood. At the hearings Mr. H. Turner assured the County that the development would be first class...that he would personally screen the builders' plans...look at the hodgepodge of styles with which we are blessed. That 208 lot subdivision is not yet completed. Why not? The sewer, water and other utilities are there on the south side of Linden Road. Why begin new development on the north? Isn't growth supposed to be contiguous? I believe the greed of the owners is the driving force here.

Mr. John Turner would like us to believe "Our rural atmosphere is gone forever." I for one do not believe that. So long as there is one producing field left there will be "country" life.

Residents just trying to prevent sprawl

I am writing this letter in response to a letter I read in last week's News-Ledger. It was submitted by John Turner of the West Sacramento Land Company. I feel that the strong language he chose to use warrants an equally strong, if less negative, response.

I am resident of Linden Road directly south of the future River Ranch Development. I have lived in West Sacramento for the past six years and have always felt welcome here. Mr. Turner's letter did not make me feel welcome! Indeed his letter should make anyone that is not a native, landowning resident feel unwelcome.

In reaction to the development that is expected across the street from me, I have become more knowledgeable about the city frameworks. The Southport Design Guidelines and the Southport Framework Plan are two documents that might be of interest to Mr. Turner. Since he believes that the "rural atmosphere of is gone forever" from West Sacramento, he might be interested in much of what these two documents have to say. They both stress "an alternative to suburban sprawl." Agricultural land is even set aside to retain "some of the rural character of the Southport region."

I think it is sad when land developers such as John Turner lack vision to develop land responsibly. I live on former Turner property now and lack any real legal process to enforce my CCR's. This could have been avoided if West Sacramento Land Company had made a provision making Mandatory Homeowners' Association Fees part of the development agreement. However, this is only one of many problems that my development has had to endure.

Mr. Turner's attitude that we should "go look for a real injustice to correct," speaks to the fact that many developers feel that mediocrity is all we should expect. I do not wish to accept mediocrity. If I wished to live in a sea of homes with no character and no community feeling, I would be living in Natomas or West Elk Grove.

I chose to live in West Sacramento because it is unique, and I will help fight to keep it that way. Mr. Turner does not have the right to expect us to accept his way of thinking. Luckily, I believe, we have a City Council that will uphold the city's frameworks. If so, we may have a chance to save West Sacramento from the threat of mindless suburban sprawl that is so pervasive throughout California.

DAVID M. WILLIAMSON

quick to stress that a lot of hard work by city staff and others also played a roll in bringing the ballpark idea this far. "This project might not have happened without Les Bowman in the redevelopment agency, for example," he commented.)

"When I joined the council," said the second-termer, "I asked for and got a lot of regional assignments. That has had some payoffs in terms of the ballpark."

Cabaldon has developed a rapport with Sacramento supervisors such as Roger Dickenson and Muriel Johnson, although the same board used to regard West Sacramento "as just some foreign government" when the two jurisdictions talked about matters such as the Sacramento airport, he said.

"We had tended to be too insular (regarding our relationship with Sacramento)," he said. "We've had very good relations in Yolo County and Solano County – that's been developed for a long time before I was on the council, by council woman Cindy Tuttle, for example. But we would go meet with the Sacramento mayor and council only once a year."

Cabaldon said West Sacramento's leaders and staff are now developing a stronger relationship with the Sacramento city government – even though observers note a sometimes-hostile competition between the two cities.

"All roads don't go through Mayor Serna in Sacramento," Cabaldon said.

The two cities are, for example, still discussing the possibility of running a sewage line which will serve the Natomas area across the river to West Sacramento, and southwards, so Sacramento can avoid having to dig up developed areas of the city for the new line. And both the city and county of Sacramento are talking with West Sacramento about West Sacramento joining the Sacramento Sanitation District – using the region's existing sewage plant and effectively taking out of the sewage treatment plant.

"We're leaving our options open," added Cabaldon, stating that West Sacramento is also continuing with plans to build its own plant, just in case.

Cabaldon is single and a resident of the "Old West Sacramento" neighborhood. He is a UC Berkeley graduate in environmental economics (and was a student lobbyist commuting to the capital), and former legislative staffing aide.

EDAC to discuss firehouse

Potential uses of the historic Washington Firehouse will be up for public discussion during the next meeting of the Economic Development Advisory Commission (EDAC), Thursday, March 11, at 6 p.m. in the City Council Chambers, 2101 Stone Blvd. McCabe Pressey Architects, the firm selected by the city to evaluate the Firehouse, will display initial designs for possible uses of the building. Interested citizens are invited to view the designs and share opinions. These evaluations will help the West Sacramento City Council decide on the reuse of the building.

Local resident Lana Paulhamus attended a February workshop in which the architects' designs were first presented. "It was very useful with a lot of good ideas about the potential reuse of the Firehouse," she said. "(McCabe-Pressey Architects) are open-minded and receptive about the project. They know firsthand how the Firehouse restaurant in Old Sacramento was transformed into a nice setting."

McCabe-Pressey Architects participated in the restoration of many of Old Sacramento's buildings. The firm will prepare a final report containing a structural evaluation of the Firehouse, along with final draft designs for the potential uses of the building and rehabilitation cost estimates. The West Sacramento Redevelopment Agency expects to present this report to the West Sacramento City Council next month.

Happy winner

Amanda Noperi loves her beautiful, new, hot pink bicycle. Amanda sold eight cases of candy ($320) in the recent candy sale for Valentine's Day at Westmore Oaks Elementary School to win this prize. The bike arrived just in time for her sixth birthday.

Amanda is the daughter of Karen Ellis and Richard Noperi, and is in Mrs. Schnaubelt's afternoon kindergarten class. She competed with students from kindergarten through the fifth grade.

The money raised from the sale will go directly to Amanda's class to be used for field trips, instructional supplies and materials.
